"Communication – Cooperation – Collaboration"

Volume 6, Number 20

Greetings Coalition Family!

Happy Birthday to "The Greatest" Muhammad Ali!

To all those who have responded to our repeated requests to seek collaboration with others who are working exhaustively to preserve and elevate the quality of life in our neighborhoods, thank you! Realizing that "We are the ones we have been waiting for." Is a positive step toward to defeating the foes that stand in defiance of our progress. It IS up to you.

Past the seeker as he prayed came the crippled and the beggar and the beaten. And seeing them... he cried, "Great God, how is it that a loving creator can see such things and yet do nothing about them?" God said, "I did do something. I made you." ~Author Unknown

Bacteria trigger production of key immune cells

(Reuters) - Allergies and autoimmune diseases such as rheumatoid arthritis could one day be prevented by consuming a type of bacteria, like probiotics taken in yoghurt, according to a study published on Friday.

The researchers fed mice with a family of bacteria and found that it triggered the production of certain white blood cells, called regulatory T cells.

"By increasing regulatory T cells, they will help suppress many of our allergies and autoimmune diseases," said one of the scientists, Kenya Honda, an immunology associate professor at the University of Tokyo. Regulatory T cells are white blood cells that regulate the immune system and prevent it from excessive reactions.

When an immune system goes into an overdrive, it can cause allergies. It can also destroy healthy cells and tissues and cause autoimmune diseases like rheumatoid arthritis, psoriasis or scaly skin, and Crohn's disease.

Honda and colleagues, who published their findings in the journal Science, used antibiotics to flush all bacteria from the guts of a group of mice.

They later fed the rodents 46 species of harmless Clostridium bacteria and found that regulatory T cells quickly returned to their colons.

"The 46 strains were isolated from healthy, conventionally reared mice," Honda said by telephone. "And the strains were sufficient for the induction of regulatory T cells in their colons."

The researchers next fed the bacteria to normal mice and found that it produced elevated levels of regulatory T cells in their colons. These normal mice were also able to ward off some allergies and colitis, an autoimmune disease, Honda said.

"We fed the clostridium species to normal, conventionally reared mice ... they had more regulatory T cells in their colons and they were resistant to colitis and other allergies," he said.

Looking ahead, Honda said experts can study the possibility of including live Clostridium bacteria in fermented foods.

"We may be able to use live Clostridium species in probiotics, like in yoghurt. If you drink Clostridium species, you may be able to increase regulatory T cells in your intestines and your allergic responses will be taken care of," he said.

Probiotics are live micro-organisms that are believed to be good for their hosts.

There are many other strains of Clostridium and some are harmful, including one that causes tetanus and the Clostridium difficile, a drug-

Group invokes KKK in hopes of saving young Black lives

Written by Nathaniel Lee Tribune Correspondent

In an effort to raise awareness about the Black on Black crime, a West Philadelphia group dedicated to community unification has embarked on a public awareness campaign by producing shirts that compare today's terror produced by young Black men to the existence of the Ku Klux Klan.

According to official sources, the leading causes of death for Black men in America are other Black men. Some have speculated that more Blacks are killed by other Black men today than were ever killed by members of the Ku Klux Klan during the pinnacle of the Jim Crow era.

This is the message of the Moorish Unification Council of the World Incorporated, founded and chaired by Wesley Wilson-Bey. Wilson-Bey produced the t-shirts bearing the message "No more Klan in the Hood," which equates the terror now caused by young Black men with guns to the terror once conducted by white terrorist group.

"The reason we dubbed it [the shirt] 'the Klan in the hood' is because our young people have taken the place of the Klan and we have to have visual things for our young people to see that the things that they are doing are incorrect," Wilson-Bey said.

Understanding their history is key, according to Wilson-Bey, for raising Kathy's Korner!

Returning from a trip to visit my grandmother in California, I was stopped by a state trooper in Kansas for exceeding the speed limit. Grateful to have received a warning instead of a ticket, I gave him a small bag of my grandmother's delicious chocolate-chip cookies and proceeded on my way. Later, I was stopped by another trooper. "What have I done?" I asked. "Nothing," the trooper said, smiling. "I heard you were passing out great chocolate-chip cookies."

the awareness and hence possibly changing the behavior of those engaged in criminal activities in the streets of Philadelphia.

"If they understand their history they will understand that the Klan was a terror in the community. Our young people have taken over that same mentality where they are terrorizing our community. Our old can't sit on the steps, they are knocking on doors and killing people on the front porches in front of their parents — this is asinine and crazy," Wilson-Bey said.

The shirts, said Wilson-Bey, are produced by the Moorish Unification Council to provide the youth an opportunity to take a look at themselves.

"We have already run the course of what the Klan has done and thought that we were finished with that mentality," Wilson-Bey said. "Now we see it again arising in our young people and so we have to step up to the plate and say 'enough is enough.'"

Simply putting out a message isn't the mission for the Moorish Council; after awareness has been raised, the hope is that action will be taken by the people most affected.

"This shirt will hopefully make both our young people and others get involved and help engage our communities in order to stop our young from saturating the prison systems," Wilson-Bey said.

While previous generations have had to fight for civil rights and against such issues as segregation, many of today's youth have had no significant movement, which served them to take to the streets, according to the presentation.

"I think it [the shirt] will get them to do some research, get them to ask the question: 'who is the Klan? What are they doing for them to align me with this racist group?' Once they understand who the Klan are then they can make a fair assessment of what part they are playing in this whole scheme of violence toward their own people," Wilson-Bey said.

Those interested in acquiring a shirt or finding out more about the Moorish Unification Council can contact the group by calling Wilson-Bey at (215) 476-0280.

Root Cause and Open Society Foundations Campaign for Black Male Achievement to Launch a Leadership and Sustainability Institute

BOSTON -To bolster the efforts of advocates and organizations working to improve the life outcomes of black males in the U.S., Root Cause and the Open Society Foundations Campaign for Black Male Achievement are launching a Leadership and Sustainability Institute. The project is meant to strengthen the capacity of the campaign's grantees and other nonprofit organizations working within the field of black male achievement. "It's going to take decades of effort to make real headway on the many difficult issues that black men and boys in this country face so we are acting with the fierce urgency of now," said Shawn Dove, the Campaign Director of the Campaign for Black Male Achievement. "We're excited to partner with Root Cause on this important legacy:

The function of education is to teach one to think intensively and to think critically. Intelligence plus character - that is the goal of true education.

an institute that provides individuals and organizations working on black males achievement with the tools and support they need to ensure success."

Black men and boys face major racial disparities, unequal opportunities, and achievement gaps at nearly every stage in life including early childhood, primary and secondary school, college, and employment.

For example, by 2004, 50 percent of black men in their 20s who lacked a college education were jobless, as were 72 percent of high school dropouts; 42 percent of all black boys have failed an entire grade at least once and only 18 percent of black men ages 20-21 are enrolled in college; the Bureau of Justice Statistics projected that 28 percent of black males in America will serve some time in state or federal prison.

While over the years numerous leaders, advocates and organizations have made major strides in improving the life outcomes and achievements of black men and boys, sustaining a strong and consistent multi-decade focus on the issue has been a great struggle.

An 1995 Urban Institute study found that of the 51 programs focused on black men and boys surveyed, after 10 years a quarter no longer existed and less than a quarter still maintained programming focusing on black males. Organizations working in the black male achievement field have faced, and continue to face, more obstacles compared to the overall nonprofit sector including:

The black male achievement field has been plagued by inconsistent philanthropic support. Organizations often work in isolation from one another, may be working in segregated neighborhoods, and have lower access to networks and resources to help grow their impact. Efforts to coordinate the field are often short term, inconsistent, and unstructured. Available growth and sustainability resources often lack sufficient cultural context or focus on organizations working in this field, and those few service providers that are dedicated to the field are often small, geographically scattered, have inconsistent cash flow, slow growth of impact, and challenges to sustainability.

About the Open Society Foundations Campaign for Black Male Achievement

The Campaign for Black Male Achievement is a multi-issue, cross-fund strategy to address black men and boys' exclusion from economic, social, educational, and political life in the United States.

It is incontestable and deplorable that Negroes have committed crimes; but they are derivative crimes. They are born of the greater crimes of the white society. – Martin Luther King, Jr.

The campaign responds to a growing body of research that reveals the intensification of black males' negative life outcomes. It builds on U.S. Programs' mission to support individuals and organizations that nurture the development of a more democratic, just society, as well as the Open Society Foundations' expertise and past work to reduce incarceration, promote racial justice, and support youth engagement and leadership development.

Comcast unveils new plan to combat digital divide

Comcast has announced that it will begin offering a new service, Internet Essentials, in time for the 2011-12 school year.

This initiative will directly address the major barriers that many in our communities face for in-home broadband adoption: affordability and lack of digital literacy.

In today's world, it is important for everyone to be digitally literate. Broadband adoption is vital for our communities because it helps improve our children's education, our local economy, and the ability for members of our communities to find jobs and benefit from opportunities available online.

Comcast Internet Essentials will provide eligible families with:

- Affordable home Internet service ($9.95 per month)
- A low-cost computer ($149.99 plus taxes)

Internet Essentials will be available everywhere that Comcast offers its high-speed Internet service. Students in more than 4,000 school districts in 39 states and the District of Columbia will be able to participate.

Comcast will accept new Internet Essentials participants for at least three years, through the end of the 2013-14 school year. Any household that qualifies during this three-year period will remain eligible for Internet Essentials, provided the household still qualifies for the program, until that child graduates from high school.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

Q: Are these manufacturer coupons or coupons that I print on my computer?

A: All of our coupons are actual manufacturer coupons. Fewer and fewer retailers accept coupons that are printed from your computer because of a huge increase in counterfeit coupons. Actual manufacturer coupons which we issue are accepted everywhere that coupons are accepted.

Q: Can these coupons be doubled?

A: Yes. These are manufacturer issued coupons and may be doubled in any store that offers double coupons.

Q: What are the face values and the expiration dates of these coupons?

A: Being manufacturer coupons, the manufacturer determines the face values of the coupons. We currently stock coupons ranging in value from 40 cents to 5.00 dollars. The coupon expiration dates are generally valid for 90 days.

Q: How can I use $1,000.00 worth of coupons in 90 days?
